Field of the Invention This invention relates to a process and structure for incorporating a semiconductor laser diode into a near-infrared waveguide optical fiber. 2. Discussion of the Related Art A conventional high-power laser diode has a thickness of about 1 to 1.5.mu.m, and is fabricated by epitaxially growing on a GaAs substrate a semiconductor layer with a thickness of 1.mu.m or less, followed by epitaxially growing, in layers, an n.sup.+ GaAs layer with a thickness of 1.mu.m or greater. The substrate material having a refractive index close to that of the semiconductor layer serves as a cladding, and the n.sup.+ GaAs layer serves as a first conductivity type semiconductor contact layer. In the conventional high-power laser diode having the described structure, a layer (active layer) of the fundamental wave oscillation region is made thin to decrease the laser oscillation threshold. Meanwhile, a near-infrared laser optical fiber is generally made of a silica-based glass material, and has a core of a diameter of about 10.mu.m and a cladding with a lower refractive index than that of the core. The core and cladding are filled with a dopant for providing a low refractive index. A power equal to or greater than 30 watts is conventionally required for a high-power laser diode. However, waveguide components are known that require a much larger power for a longitudinal mode. For example
