Evidence for altered post-tetanic potentiation of slow excitatory post-synaptic potentials in aged rat dentate gyrus. The electrophysiological parameters of both the slow excitatory post-synaptic potentials (EPSPs) and the population spike were measured in field CA1 of the hippocampus of aged (18 months old) and young (3 months old) male Sprague-Dawley rats. Single stimuli evoked orthodromic population spikes in both groups of rats, whereas paired stimuli resulted in significantly smaller population spikes in the aged rats. Furthermore, the slow EPSPs recorded from aged rats were significantly smaller than those of the young. Post-tetanic depression (PTD) of the population spike was greatly enhanced in the aged rats and it was closely associated with a reduction in the size of slow EPSPs. This enhancement in the PTD was not due to a change in the NMDA receptor complex. PTD was not affected by the number of population spikes required to induce maximal depression. This study suggests that the synaptic plasticity, as measured by the slow EPSPs and the PTD, is severely impaired in the aged hippocampus.
